

Highlights

Is the “Do-Nothing” option or the “Wait-and-see” option a viable forestland management alternative today? Come and discuss these and other management options this summer in Gatlinburg, TN. The theme of the meeting is that nonnative invasive plants are changing the way we manage both private and public forestland. Invasive plants are altering the landscape and the options that foresters have available. A new toolbox is being developed to combat nonnative plants by public land managers, researchers, landowners, industry foresters and private consultants. Come meet with us and share your experiences, your frustrations and your successes as we discuss nonnative invasive plants and visit the Great Smoky Mountains National Park to see how they are combating these new problems.
